X-notifier for Chrome Screenshots: X-notifier for Chrome Publisher’s Description: X-notifier is designed for advanced Gmail users, offering a simple to use extension that allows you to keep tabs on your gmail inbox and makes it easier than ever to be in touch with the latest information in your inbox. Tiny Garage is a small, versatile and convenient utility that works as a priority notification agent for Gmail and Google Calendar. Apart from Gmail, the Tiny Garage application can keep tabs on Yahoo Mail and Google Calendar, so you can use it to redirect the two accounts to your web browser if you want. Furthermore, the tool features the ability to check the content of various folders and also the ability to set up custom notification alerts (e.g. an image in the inbox, a phone call, a message, an appointment, etc.). All this can be done in just a few simple clicks, although you need to be absolutely sure about the application’s features and their capabilities. The Tiny Garage extension for Chrome is available for free. What’s more, the developer released an official Windows version of this useful add-on, ensuring that all of the users will be able to set it up and to install it. The extension can be dragged and dropped onto the Chrome browser, and its installation shouldn’t pose any particular problems. The application’s UI is very simple and the only available options are displayed in a little panel when you’re inside the Options window. In order to configure these options, the settings need to be made inside the Tiny Garage menu, and the extension needs to be restarted in order to apply the new settings. If you’re using the Tiny Garage extension for Chrome and want to be able to check

X-notifier is a versatile browser extension that can keep tabs on your email accounts in order to notify you regarding the number of unread emails. It works with various email platforms such as Gmail, Yahoo, Hotmail, AOL, Daum, Never, Nate and can be extended to monitor sites such as Twitter and Facebook via scripts that can be downloaded from the developer’s website. The extension is not restricted to handling one account, but it can keep an eye on several, for that matter. The check interval can be configured by the user. Deploying the add-on on the system is nothing complicated, simply drag and drop it on top of the Extensions section inside the Chrome browser and confirm its installation when you’re prompted to do so. In order to enjoy its perks, you need to navigate to the Options window, where you can configure the accounts to be monitored. Your login details are required, of course, for the email checking process. Alongside these, you can also set the application to watch over the Spam folder and to notify you when a new message arrives, optionally through a custom audio alert. If you’ve finished tweaking this section, you can press the ‘Save’ button, at which point the add-on immediately starts checking the status of your inbox, displaying the number of unread messages in your account(s) inside a little panel located in the extension bar.
